FOREWORD

In the late Seventies, the annual number of degrees awarded in Southern higher education began to slow down and, at some degree levels, decline--mirroring the nationwide leveling trend detected earlier in the decade. In addition to the enrollment slowdown, the growing tendency of students to attend part-time and to "stop out" very likely contributed to the drop-off in degrees awarded.

The Southern Regional Education Board (SREB) has chronicled the trends in degree production since the late Sixties. This report covering the 1977-78 academic year features for the first time detailed, state-by-state tabulations for two-year associate degrees. It also includes for the first time in several years state information for all academic subfields on which data are available. In addition, the summary tables woven into the introductory text provide an overview of general trends in degree production.

Nationally, the actual decline in doctoral production began in 1973-74. This decline did not begin in the South until 1976-77, but is now comparable to the national decline, falling by about three percent between 1976-77 and 1977-78. In professional education, the picture has been one of movement from particularly strong growth in the early Seventies to light growth in the latter half of the decade.

At the master's level, both national and regional growth continued somewhat longer than at the doctoral level, but had finally fallen off in 1977-78. The strong incentive for occupational upgrading in the teaching profession, which greatly influences the numbers of students preparing for the master's degree, undoubtedly was largely responsible for buoying master's production in the early Seventies and retarding the drop-off until later in the decade. Bachelor's degree production has moved from moderate growth in the early Seventies to a definite leveling in the last several years.

Examination of trends by academic field and by states makes clear the wide range of numerical differences in growth or decline among types of degrees and geographical areas. Planning for the future that takes into account shifting needs and demands can help assure that scarce resources will be applied at those points where they can be most effective.

INTRODUCTION

Degrees Awarded in the Nation and the South, 1977-78 is another in a series of SREB reports derived from degree information collected by the National Center for Education Statistics.[1] The large portion of this publication consists of two tables. Table 1 shows, for the United States, the SREB region, and each of the Southern states, the total number of degrees awarded at the bachelor's, master's, doctoral, and first professional levels for each field included in the HEGIS[2] taxonomy of academic programs. Table 2 similarly displays data on associate degrees according to HEGIS categories for arts and science programs and the technologies. Both tables further refine these totals according to the sex of degree recipients and the control of the granting institution.

These two extensive tables are supplemented by several tables in this narrative section.

[1] The 1977-78 data, the latest available at the time this report was prepared, include degrees awarded between July 1, 1977 and June 30, 1978. Data for other years cited in this report represent this same 12-month period.

DEGREES BY LEVEL

Associate Degrees. Nearly 450,000 associate degrees were awarded in the United States during 1977-78 (see Table A). Slightly more than a fourth of these degrees for two-year programs were granted by institutions in the Southern region. About two out of five associate degrees--37.9 percent nationwide, 43.4 percent in the South--were in the arts and science fields. Many students who graduate with these degrees transfer to senior colleges and universities to continue their studies. Two-year college enrollment has continued to increase as a proportion of all enrollments, and is now over a third of total enrollment in the South. Among six broad categories of technologies, the largest proportion of associate degrees in the nation was awarded in the business and commerce fields (21.6 percent of all degrees). In the South, leading fields for associate degrees in the technologies were more evenly balanced between business and commerce and the health sciences. Each of these areas accounted for about 17 percent of all associate degrees in the region.

Bachelor's Degrees. More than 930,000 bachelor's degrees were awarded by U.S. colleges in 1977-78, as shown in Table B. Southern institutions accounted for 27.2 percent of this total, or just over a quarter million. This represents the highest annual number of bachelor's degrees in the region to date, although the national total was at the same level as five years earlier, in 1972-73. The U.S. total was highest in 1974-75, and has "seesawed" below that level since that time. Taken as a percent of bachelor's, master's, doctoral, and first professional degrees combined, bachelor's degrees have declined during the 1970s, primarily because of the much faster increases in the number of master's degrees. This change has been more pronounced in the South than in the nation.

Master's Degrees. For the first time, there was a drop in the annual number of master's degrees awarded (see Table C). As a result, the South continued to increase its contribution to the national production of master's degrees, up to 81,712, or 26.1 percent of the U.S. total of 312,816 in 1977-78. In large part, this represents the predominance of education degrees, which account for 48 percent of Southern master's degrees, compared with 38 percent in the nation.

Doctoral Degrees. The number of doctorates awarded in 1977-78 showed a decline for the second year in a row (see Table D and Figure 1). Doctorates as a percent of all degrees (bachelor's and higher) have remained fairly constant in the South while gradually, though steadily, decreasing in the nation. The region also has continued to increase its share of national doctoral output. The percentage of U.S. doctoral degrees awarded by Southern universities stands at 22.6, up from 18.6 in 1970.

The Southern decline in doctoral output since 1975-76 mirrors a national decline which began in 1973-74. The worsening job market for new Ph.D.s obviously has influenced decisions of many potential students. Another possible examination is the trend toward part-time enrollment, especially at the graduate level. Part-time enrollment in the region in 1979 accounted for two in five students at public campuses. Although more students are enrolled, many are taking longer to complete degree requirements, if indeed they graduate.

First Professional Degrees. Nearly 67,000 first professional degrees were granted by U.S. colleges in 1977-78, the highest number ever (see Table E). In addition, first professional degrees have continued to increase during the decade as a percent of all degrees.

STATE TOTALS

Between 1971 and 1978, total associate degrees increased nearly 100 percent in the SREB states, while growing about 65 percent in the country (Table F). Ten Southern states more than doubled the annual number of associate degrees awarded during the period. Louisiana recorded the largest increase, 285.2 percent, although that state awards fewer two-year degrees than any state in the region, except one. Growth in percentage terms was much less evident at the bachelor's level. Even so, the regional rate of expansion over seven years was 17.9 percent, compared to a U.S. increase of 10 percent. Florida, Maryland, South Carolina, and Virginia recorded the largest increases while four other regional states showed decline from the 1971 level.

Master's and doctoral degrees have increased much faster in the SREB states than in the U.S. The regional growth was double the national rate for master's degrees, and the South expanded by 20 percent its annual number of doctorates, while the national level was constant in comparison with 1971. South Carolina more than tripled the number of master's degrees awarded in 1971. Florida has led the region in growth of doctorates. First professional degrees showed comparable increases in the nation and in the South from 1971 to 1978. Florida, Mississippi, and South Carolina more than doubled their annual first professional completions during this time.

DEGREES BY FIELD OF STUDY

At the bachelor's level, business and management, education, and social sciences were the most popular fields of study, but while business continued to attract more students, the latter two fields have declined in numbers of degrees in recent years (see Table G). Fields which showed substantial growth are computer science, public affairs, and the health professions. Those which have declined in recent years include foreign languages, library science, and mathematics. The fall-off in mathematics degrees underscores the growing shortage expected for high technology occupations, for which mathematics often is the basis. However, students are now more interested in applied mathematics areas, as witnessed by increases in computer science degrees.

Southern institutions awarded more than a third of the nation's bachelor's degrees in education, library science, and theology. The South contributed least to degrees in area studies, law (pre-law), foreign languages, and interdisciplinary studies.

At the master's level, education is the largest field in terms of degree production (see Table H). Public affairs and computer science were the fastest growing fields in the SREB region, while mathematics and letters have declined over recent years. Southern schools accounted for 30 percent or more of the total degrees in agriculture, education, home economics, and theology.

Education was also the most popular field of study at the doctoral level, judging from the distribution of degrees shown in Table I. Other fields with high degree completions in both the nation and the South were biological sciences, physical sciences, psychology, and social sciences. Architecture, library science, computer science, and public affairs have shown the most growth in the South, but these fields graduate relatively few students. The region provided a fourth or more of the U.S. doctorates in business, education, home economics, and theology.

Among first professional fields, law accounted for more than half of the degrees awarded in the U.S. and in the region. Optometry and law were the fastest growing fields in the South between 1971 and 1978. The region awarded about one in four of first professional degrees in the fields listed in Table J, with the exceptions of osteopathic medicine, where the South provided one in ten degrees, and podiatry, which is not available as a course of study in the region.

DEGREES AWARDED BY SEX

Women now comprise a majority of collegiate enrollments in the nation and the region. While women are well represented in bachelor's and master's degrees awarded, they are considerably fewer in proportion at the doctoral and first professional levels. Undergraduate men were inclined to major in business and management, while women pursued education more often (see Table K). Twice as many men as women earned degrees in business in the South in 1977-78; three times as many women graduated in education as did men. Overall, just under half of the baccalaureates went to women. Women were most represented in health professions, home economics, and library science. A comparison of the percentage of degrees awarded to women in the South by field in 1974-75 and 1977-78 shows considerable advancement made by women in agriculture, business, engineering, and law (pre-law).

Table L offers a similar analysis at the master's level. In 1977-78, nearly one in three men and almost two in three women receiving master's degrees in the South majored in education. Of all master's degrees in the region, 54.5 percent went to women, compared with 48.3 in the nation, reflecting the predominance of women in teacher education. In addition to education, fields in which women comprised a large majority of degree recipients included foreign languages, the health professions, home economics, and library science. Subject matter areas which showed marked increases in representation by women between 1975 and 1978 were business, engineering, law, and psychology.

The largest percentage of doctorates awarded, to either sex, were in education (see Table M). Among doctoral students in Southern universities, 26 percent of the men and some 45 percent of the women graduated in education. The respective figures for the nation at-large are somewhat lower. Women received 27.1 percent of all doctorates in the South, which was comparable to the national level. Fields in which women comprised 50 percent or more of the degree recipients in the South were communications, home economics, and foreign languages. Those fields making marked increases in the percent awarded women between 1975 and 1978 were area studies, business, communications, arts, the health professions, and public affairs.

Law accounted for the largest portion of first professional degrees awarded in the U.S. and the SREB region for both men (49.4 percent in 1977-78 in the South) and women (61.6 percent), as shown in Table N. Medicine was second highest in proportion, with about 24 percent of professional degrees to men and women in the region. Considering all professional fields together, women earned 18.7 percent of the degrees within the South and 21.5 percent of all degrees nationally. Women did not account for a majority of graduates in any professional field, but were most highly concentrated in pharmacy, where women were less than a third of degree recipients. However, in recent years women have gained in representation in all of the professional fields.

The detailed tables following this section show the distribution of degrees by subfield for 1977-78. The reader can see, for example, that most of the graduates in business and management are in business administration and in accounting, and that the largest education subfield is elementary education. It is likely, therefore, that most of the growth and decline in these areas, respectively, is attributable to these subfields in particular. The detailed tables also indicate the sex of degree recipients, allowing the conclusion that dominance of women in the health fields is due primarily to the traditional attraction of nursing for females, and that engineering--in all subfields--is slow to make progress in enlisting women.
